Corporate law | How to recapitalise a limited liability company

There are at least several ways in which a limited liability company can be recapitalised. The increase in the company's share capital seems to be a standard and well-known form of recapitalisation, with alternatives including additional payments and shareholder loans.

However, when making a decision, it is advisable to thoroughly understand the potential consequences of each of these mechanisms.

Patrycja Wakuluk and Adam Czarnota write in detail about the ways to recapitalise the company here
